Park history

Riverside became a state park in 1933 and many of the park's distinctive structures, including a suspension bridge across the Spokane River, were built by the Civilian Conservation Corps. Prior to white settlement, the area was a major gathering site for Native American cultures.

The Spokane House Interpretive Center at Nine Mile Falls features the history of the early fur trade and its effects on the Native American population.

Overnight accommodations

Riverside's main campground is in an area of the park known as the Bowl and Pitcher. There are 16 standard (tent) campsites, 13 RV partial-hookup sites with electricity and water, two RV full-hookup sites with electricity, water, and sewer, and two cabins to accommodate up to five people. Dogs allowed in one cabin only. Both cabins are heated and include a bathroom, bunkbed, futon, sink, microwave, and table.

Lake Spokane Campground has 10 standard (tent) campsites and one companion site to accommodate up to 12 people.

There are two large group camp areas located at the Bowl and Pitcher campground that accommodate either 40 or 60 tent campers and one group camp at Lake Spokane that accommodates up to 25 campers. Fees are based on the number of campers.

Riverside State Park

Welcome to Riverside State Park

Riverside State Park is a beautiful camping park that lies along the Spokane River near the City of Spokane. Riverside has the second largest land area of any state park in Washington, with 9,194 acres and nearly 200,000 feet of shoreline along running rivers and freshwater marshes.

Within the park is Riverside's main campground known as Bowl and Pitcher which is nestled along the Spokane River amongst towering Ponderosa Pines and known for the iconic swinging bridge connecting the campground and day-use area to miles of trails on the other side of the Spokane River.

The Nine Mile Recreation Area offers swimming, picnicking and other water recreation opportunities. Lake Spokane Area provides secluded camping spots, a variety of picnic shelters overlooking the lake, a swimming area, and a boat launch with a dock for fishing. The Equestrian Area offers horseback riding with several hundred acres of loop trails, camping, an arena, and obstacle course. The 600-acre off-road vehicle park includes a dedicated beginner riding area.

The Spokane River Centennial State Park Trail which features nearly 40 miles of trail for walking, hiking, and bicycling along the river. The Centennial Trail runs beyond park boundaries and connects with urban portions that continue through the City of Spokane and connects with the North Idaho Centennial Trail in Post Falls.

Visitors to Riverside can enjoy the diverse array of recreational opportunities, including picnicking, camping, rock climbing, hiking, fishing, boating, wildlife viewing, kayaking, biking, and snowshoeing.
