EMBRACE YOUR NATURE

Welcome to Jarrell Cove State Park

Jarrell Cove State Park is a forested marine park on the northwest end of Harstine Island in South Puget Sound. This 43-acre camping park features 3,500 feet of saltwater shoreline and is most easily accessed by boat, although there is a road and bridge available. The park has campsites near the docks, as well as on rolling, grassy areas.

Visitors to the park enjoy hiking, biking, boating, fishing and picnicking. The park also is very popular with bird watchers, who may spot a variety of birds that call the area home, including eagles, hawks, herons, ospreys, owls and woodpeckers.

Jarrell Cove State Park staff also manage five other nearby parks, including Harstine Island, McMicken Island, Stretch Point, Eagle Island and Hope Island state parks. Harstine Island State Park is a day-use park with beach access via a half-mile trail. It is a two-mile drive from Jarrell Cove. The other satellite parks all are accessible by boat only and offer buoys for moorage.

Overnight accommodations

Jarrell Cove offers 19 standard campsites and two partial-utility sites. Campsites 1, 3, 4, 8 and 11 are reservable by calling (888) CAMPOUT or (888) 226-7688, while the remaining sites are available on a first-come, first-served basis. There also is one site open only to Cascadia Marine Trail boaters using wind- and human-powered crafts.

There is a walk-in group camp that accommodates up to 40 guests. The group camp features a picnic shelter with water.

Since boaters are the primary visitors, the park offers 14 moorage buoys and 650 of moorage and dock space. The southern dock has 30 amp power available to boaters for $6 per night. Moorage fees are charged year found for mooring from 1 p.m. to 8 a.m.
